

THE TEACHING YEAR with Belinda Webb

---

Video Transcript

This transcript is of Edition #02 – How do I build great relationships?

Speaker	Time Code	Transcription
BW	00:07	Hello and well done on making it through the first two weeks of term. Hopefully you're well on your way to making some wonderful relationships with your families and your students. This is the time where you can really emphasize building those relationships and that rapport with your students. This is also a really great time to know what they're capable of and some of that assessment that you can do right at the start can just be about getting to know what they're interested in, what they like to do and where they're at in terms of their learning and their learning abilities. It's really important time to think about how you're going to do this and what this is going to look like in your classroom. You might choose to focus on something special to introduce yourself and make it a really lovely time for your family so your students go home thinking about you as their teacher and raving about how wonderful their new teacher is and this is really the focus of these first couple of weeks in, now we've started to get to know our students is really building that relationship and that rapport with those students. It can offer some really wonderful times for you to build that relationship with them. And this is a really important part. While it's not talked about enough, it's really important part of your teaching, your first year teaching, getting to know your students. So have fun. And tune in to all the resources that are provided on the website.