

THE TEACHING YEAR with Belinda Webb

Video Transcript

This transcript is of Edition #12 – How do we celebrate success?

Belinda:

00:01

Hello and well done, you've almost made it to the end of the teaching year. I hope you have enjoyed your time with the teaching year and following along with the key milestones throughout this year. My tips for you in concluding this year is to reflect on how far you've come this year. Think about your first week and I know you will have seen changes. Take the time to chat to your mentor and review what worked well, what you enjoyed and celebrate your wins and what you could do better next year. Being reflective is an integral part of teaching, so be open and honest with this to further your teaching practice. You may like to outline further professional development opportunities that you would like to seek next year. Or begin considering what you might be doing in the future. This time of year will bring the excitement of finding out we will be next year. If you're staying in school or if you're moving on applying at meeting a new school class. Embrace this. Don't be afraid to take on new challenges. Your work as a teacher is all about what you make it. So be open to new changes in tackling the opportunities and trust your ability as a teacher. Thanks for following along. It has been a pleasure sharing with you my tips for the teaching year. I wish you all the very best for the future and again, well done.